Aircraft engineering is typically a man's world, but these ladies are proving otherwise.
TEXT: LOSHANA K SHAGAR PHOTOS: JABIR SUHIRLAN

The vast covered space looks just like a mechanic's workshop, but in place of cars are aircraft in various shapes and sizes. Parts are laid on platforms, waiting to be fixed onto planes. From the opened shutters adorning the entire length of one wall, a landing strip is visible far ahead, from which planes take off and touch down frequently.

This is Hangar Five at KL International Airport (KUA), where Malaysia Airlines' aircraft undergo servicing and maintenance according to schedule. Working in this area are members of our Engineering Department, and they are mostly male – which is not surprising given the technical demands of the job. But

Meeting the challenge

Natasha Sallehudin, Joanne Emuang and Nursyarina Zulkifli Wijitha are three of our Licensed Aircraft Engineers who are proof that the fairer sex can be as tough as nails when the job calls for it. They joined our Engineering Department as Licensed Aircraft Engineers after graduating from the Malaysian Institute of Aviation Technology (MIAT) in Dengkil, Selangor.

Their journey has certainly not been a walk in the park, to the
